New York, Suits of thin metal underwear to fit tightly over the fabric skins of future lighter-than-air Leviathans are proposed by Com Garland Fulton, of the bureau of aeronautics, United States navy. The airship underwear would be designed not to protect against temperature, but from the smashing forces which will be encountered in the air when the great ships are speeded up in flight. "If the attempt is made", Fulton told the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, "to increase the speed of a large airship from the present maximum of 80-85 statute miles per hour; to say 100 miles, additional weight will be required not only in the power plant but in the general structure as well." This brings up anew the possibility of obtaining added strength required for higher speeds and ground-handling under unfavorable conditions by superimposing some of the principles of a pressure airship upon the conventional type of rigid airship".

"The result would be a composite type of construction which might have a thin metal covering. This covering, if placed under tension by interior pressure, would be made to function in a definite manner as a strength member."

 18 PLANKOWNERS ON WEST VIRGINIA
 GREET CAPTAIN STARK, OLD SHIPMATE

When Captain H.R. Stark reported on board the West Virginia as Commanding Officer of that vessel last week, one of the most interesting groups waiting to greet him included 18 men, the plankowners of the West Virginia, who had served under Captain Stark when he was the Executive Officer of the Ship ten years before. Admiral T.J. Senn was the Captain at that time when the West Virginia was put in commission, and the flying start to which the Navy's newest battleship got away so auspiciously at that time is largely given credit for the successful career she has had since then. Captain Stark will be remembered from his visit to this Station during the Autumn when he came here with Secretary Swanson, whose aide he was at that time.
